TO OUR SECRETARY

It is with sadness and much regret that you are leaving us and yet time marches on, and changes come. To all of us, each and everyone, friendships many have you made here. A little firmer year after year, your kindly smile and gracious way. Has made us love you more each day. Now as you leave us and new friends make. Along in memory the old ones take. And realize the ones who love you best. Are the members of the O. E. S.

NEWS OF THE WEEK

Reaction in France

Paris, France—As an aftermath of the strike of a million workers when Socialist Premier Leon Blum assumed power, less aggressive Socialists are demanding an end to violence. From Marseilles, Deputy Billoux exclaimed: "The Rightists are sending rangers into the streets. They want to turn my city into another Chicago!" Cried another Marseillais, "Communism is in France! The Soviets are here! As a Socialist I will not stand for it!"

The Glorious Fourth

New York City. Not only little boys, but big business is interested in this week and its celebration. Some 50 American firms manufacture fireworks, with sales of $6,000,000 a year and a payroll of $700,000 for 1,500 workers. On the other side of the picture, the National Board of Fire Underwriters estimates that fireworks caused $3,467,000 damage during the years 1922 to 1926; since then more rigid restrictions have cut down losses. Dr. Leland E. Cofer, of the American Museum of Safety, states that last year fireworks killed thirty, wounded 7,738.

Employment Increases

Washington, D. C.—In only two years since statistics have been kept have May employment and payrolls exceeded those of April, in 1922 and 1933. Last May showed $2,000 more workers employed, payrolls increased by $6,000,000. "A symbol of underlying confidence," declared the Department of Labor, "Street Cars" Myronna

The Rev. A. M. "Aunt Mary" as she was known by everyone, passed at the age of her son, Frederick Brown, on Thursday forenoon. Her poor health for over a year had been only entirely confined to her for about two weeks. She was born in Walpole, Massachusetts, and came to Maine with her son. Many of her years were spent at Trap Cove, near Woodstock. She was the daughter of Mrs. Andrew Brown, who was Miss Mary Brown, daughter of James and Abigail Brown. Washington Snapshots by JAMES PRESTON

Washington is turning paradoxical again. For months, members of Congress had chorused: "Let's adjourn and go home." Now, though, more than half of them have decided to stay in town until next session. They will go home for occasional campaign speeches, but they expect to spend most of their time in the "National Capital. The reason?

First, a great many are afraid to go home. If they do, they will have to talk, personally, with questioners and constituents. It is much easier to write a letter explaining why they voted for $100,000,000 in appropriations and almost $500,000,000 in new taxes than it is to sit down and explain the point to a man.

Second, when Congressmen go home the job hunters swarm around them. It is difficult to tell Bill Jones from his face why Tom Smith got the job that Bill Jones was after.

Third, the recent entrance of the federal government into many fields heretofore reserved to state and local governments makes it almost mandatory for Congressmen to stay in Washington to see what happens.

Admiral Mahan's bill has laid the foundation for a new and only slightly different NRA next session. The nub of the drive is the Walsh Healey bill, stipulating that those who have contracts with the government must live up to certain wage and hour conditions.

The bill was twice tabled by the House. But any committee because of its lack of merit and probable unpopularity. It was finally approved after William C. Clegg, a Republican, and A. P. Clegg, a Democrat, of the same party, did the work which was supposed to be done by the committee.

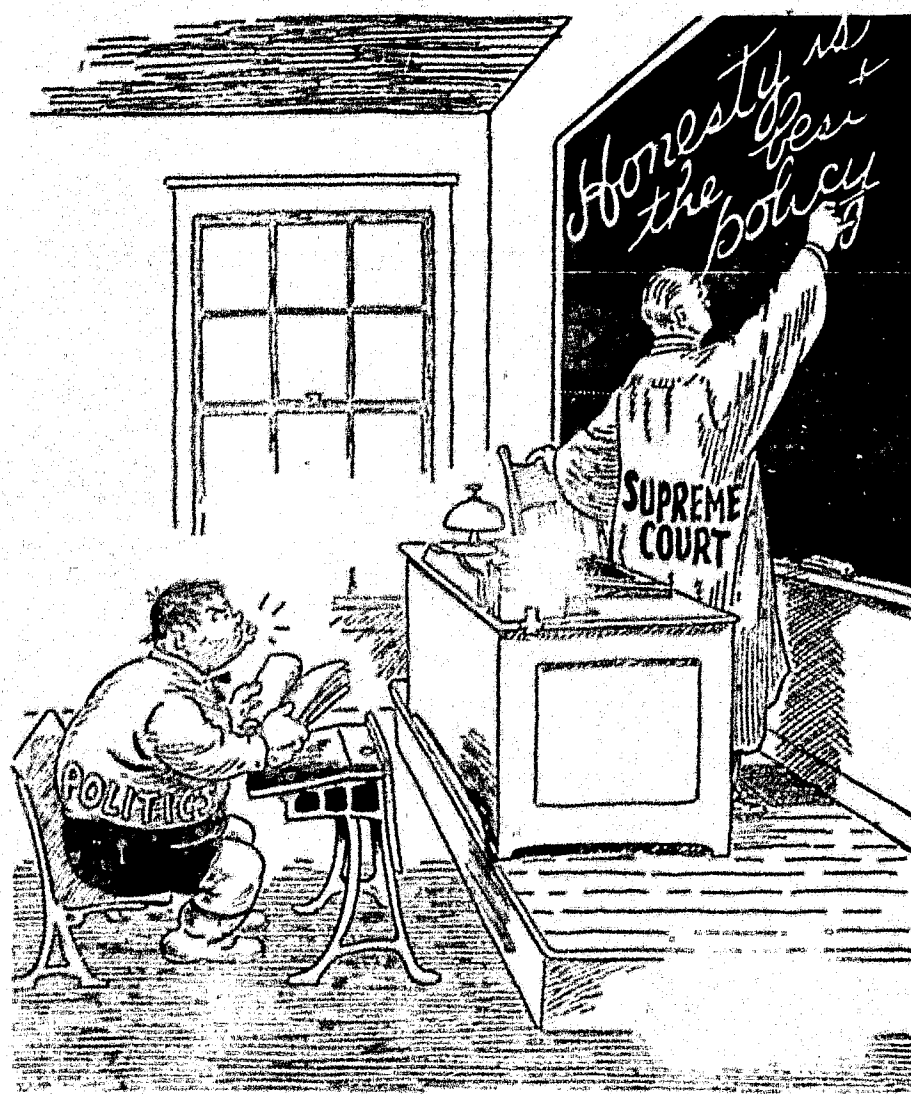

It passed the House in the final vote, there was strong opposition. But Senator Walsh picked a time when opposition of the bill was off the floor. Then he called up a bill in which the wage floor was set at 10 cents an hour. The bill was passed by a vote of 219 to 191. The following day, the bill was passed by a vote of 219 to 191.

When opponents of the Walsh Healey bill pointed out that they were not troubled that the measure would be called up and asked for consideration, and at least a chance to discuss it, leaders forced the Senate to adjourn.

The plan is to expedite the bill next session, making it sound enough to cover banks, railroads and governmental projects.

The land permanently ruined by erosion within the last 100 years represents an area equal to all the farm land in two of the large mid-western agricultural states.

BEHIND THE TEACHER'S BACK

The tax bill of the American steel industry in 1935 was equivalent to a full year's pay for 57,360 employees. During the year a total of almost $73,000,000 was paid in taxes to federal, state, and local governments.

Nearly a million rural girls and boys are now members of 4-H clubs. Enrollment for 1935 was more than 997,000, all pledged to devote head, hands, heart and health, the four H's, to improvement in rural living.

PARIS SLAUGHTERS BETHEL —LOCALS LOSE BY 17 TO 9

By R. E. D.

Wednesday night saw the luckless locals once more overwhelmed by their opponents. This time South Paris turned on the heat in the last half of the eight inning game, scoring 14 runs on 12 hits, various and sundry errors, a few spills and other unfortunate mishaps.

Paris started off with three hits capped with a lucky homer to score three runs. The locals made two in the fourth only to have Paris double their score in the fifth. Two more in the sixth made it 8 to 2 when Bethel came to bat in their half.

Scribner was safe on an error, Gill walked, Doyen and Littlehale, hit safely and Stanley reached on an error. Infield outs cleared the bases and netted five runs to once more put the locals within reach of the verdict. Paris came right back, however, with three in the seventh and six in the eighth, while all Bethel could get was two in the eighth.

Judd with a homer and triple, and Tuttle with four hits including a home run and two baggers, were high men for Paris, while Gill, Doyen and Stanley led for Bethel, the first two having two baggers.

The local infield still fails to shape up as a winning combination. Six errors, three of them at second base, helped Paris materially, while Morgan gave them three hits by falling down before reaching the ball.

A little mowing in deep center field would have saved two runs as both round-trip hits were in the deep grass plenty enough to mean the difference between a two-bagger and a home run.

Littlehale turned in a nice game behind the plate while Gill's turn of Judd's triple was sweet and snappy, the ball going well down over the bank in right field.

Barry just made the train. At Spunk, he bought a morning paper, and read of Morano's death. Even the conservative Times regarded that as the end of the case against Rogers. "Night Club Owner, Accused of Kelly Murder, Killed Hesitating Arrest," its headlines began, and ended with, "Move to Free Rogers Expected Today." Barry pored over both stories—that in the Times and that in last night's Globe—all the way to New York.

"Well," he reflected, "one of my suspects was guilty, anyway. Peter Winslow can't laugh that off."

And, suddenly, he let the newspaper fall, and leaned forward, with his wrists on his knees.

"It's queer, though," he said, almost aloud, to the click of the wheels. "Very queer. Very damned queer."

At the station, he stopped for a time table. "Is there one," he asked, "that gives the trains out of here?"

The man grinned at him, thrusting forward three thick folders.

Ten o'clock found him at Winslow's office.

"Mr. Winslow won't be in today," Peter's secretary announced. "Mrs. Winslow had a bad heart attack last night. So bad that Mr. Winslow telephoned to the Hamblidges. They're with Mrs. Winslow now."

"Was that your last news?"

"No. Mr. Winslow called up half an hour ago to say that Mrs. Winslow's a little better."

"Had he seen this?"

Barry indicated the headline in the Times.

"Yes. He talked to Mr. Colton about it. Mr. Colton's one of the young men in the office, you know. He's gone to the district attorney to ask for Rogers' release. Mr. Winslow said if you called I was to tell you that would be only a matter of hours. Should you like us to phone you when there's anything certain?"

"Please. I suppose there's no use of my going to the Tombs now?"

"Not much. Mr. Colton's going down from the district attorney's. We'll phone you."

Barry phoned Peggy, and then studied across Forty-second street. It was a delightful morning, and his father's little brother had been dropped to his hotel from the station.

"To come in my following 'em yet," Barry told himself. "I don't want to sit around that cursed room all day."

He didn't want to walk all day, and he did want to see what the other papers had to say of last night's events in the Coconut Bar. At Fifth avenue, therefore, he turned into the public library. The reports were much alike—"Night club proprietor killed resisting arrest" and "The indictment against Jay Rogers, now held for the Kelly murder, probably will be dismissed today." Barry sat, almost alone, in the "newspaper room," turning the case over in his mind. Then he asked for old files of one of the tabloids.

He was nearly an hour studying an account of the Winslow wedding. Without any definite knowledge of the date, it was a bit like looking for the proverbial needle in a haystack. Barry's curiosity was rewarded at last, when he stumbled upon a pictorial front page headed, "Lover Winslow's Wedding."

The ceremony had taken place at St. Stephen's. There were pictures of the church and of the couple. Barry turned the page and found the date. It was the first of June. The wedding had been held on Monday morning, June 1st, 1935.

house, anywhere. There was an obviously faded photograph of a hold-up, and an obviously genuine one of "Mr. and Mrs. Winslow Leaving St. Stephen's." "Gosh," Barry reflected, "No wonder Mrs. Winslow had a nervous breakdown!"

The story, on the second page, was in the best tabloid tradition. "Five years ago," it began, "Peter Winslow, obscure young attorney, secured the acquittal of George Selby, charged with participating in the robbery of a candy store in the Bronx. Yesterday, Peter Winslow, rich and famous criminal lawyer, and George Selby's widow were the principal figures in what was to have been a secret ceremony at St. Stephen's."

The present Mrs. Winslow had run away with George Selby while he was a cadet in a military school. They had come to New York, rented the "love nest," and been "blissfully happy" until Selby ran out of money, and was compelled to take his wife to a boarding house. He had been arrested there, for the candy store robbery, in April, 1921. Peter Winslow had got him off, but, the following June, he was caught in another robbery in Philadelphia, and sentenced to a long term in the State Penitentiary. With two other convicts, "Lefty" Miller and "Mugs" Scanlan, he had escaped in October, 1923. Peniless, the men "staged a hold-up that same night in Fairmount Park. The victim called for help, and Selby killed him. Scanlan was shot dead by a police officer, and Selby, attempting to get away, jumped into the river, and was drowned. His body was found two weeks later, entangled in an anchor chain."

Winslow had given Mrs. Selby work in his office, and "three years after Selby's death, love culminated in the ceremony at St. Stephen's."

That explained a good deal, Barry thought, remembering the soft, round, pink little woman with worried eyes. It explained Peter's protective attitude. It might explain his quick interest in the Rogers case, in which, Barry had told Winslow, Peggy had been "putting up such a game fight to make a man of her husband."

"That sort of thing always gets me," Peter had observed. "A woman tied up to some man who's not worthy of her, and in love with him."

Peter's "Julie" had been in love with her first husband, then. And he with her, evidently, to judge by what the tabloids said of their happiness. "Must have been something good in that chap," Barry reasoned. "Probably realized what his wife was trying to do for him. We're a curious mixture."

He was still brooding over curious mixtures, and other things, when a clock struck somewhere, and reminded him that, by now, there might be a message as to young Ridder's release awaiting him at his hotel.

There wasn't.

All Thursday afternoon Barry sat in his room and, at five o'clock, he called Peter's secretary. "Nothing definite yet," she informed him. "The district attorney's making the motion off right, but it'll be tomorrow now before anything comes of it."

Against his better judgment, then, Barry phoned Harwood. "Don't worry," the city editor said. "Have you seen tonight's Globe? Whole first page one loud yell for this kid's release. They'll be so glad to get him off their hands."

In spite of his friendliness, Barry noticed that Eric didn't say, "Come on down; we've something else for you." Nor even, "Of course, we'll expect you to cover Rogers getting out of jail." Why should he? "The big deal" was Harwood's "beat," not Barry's and, anyway, the old man would be at his desk the day after tomorrow. Harwood did say that, at last. "You'd better see him. I'll phone you when. Probably not before Monday. He'll be pretty busy for a day or two. Of course, you'll be around for your salary on Saturday. Might look me up then."

He was still on the pay roll, at least. That was important, what with over-drafts and hotel bills and all that. Better reflection, backed by experience, had persuaded him that he couldn't get much on the outside. The inside and outside were rather cheap stuff. He had sold an editorial in the city paper for three dollars. Monday's money would get square the bank account. As for the hotel bill—"Well, I'll give them my clothes," Barry decided, "and I'll have something left in my jeans when I move out of here."

He phoned Peggy again, and then dined frugally and went back to his room. Step by step, he went over his details, seeing everything in the new light cast by the events of the past few hours. At midnight, for the fifth or sixth time, he re-read the story in the Globe. "Well, that's that," he said aloud, tossing the paper into the wastebasket and winding his silver wrist-watch. "Morano's dead, young Ridder'll be free tomorrow, old Ridder'll be home Saturday, and that's that. Wonder where I'll be a week from now."

It didn't matter much. "Nothing matters much," he told himself again, dwelling on Pat's phrase. "Not without Pat, it doesn't. She's a grand girl. Out of my class, though. A week from now, she'll be playing tennis and going over to dinner at the Ridders. Wonder if Peg'll be there. Wonder what's going to happen to those two young people?"

In Friday morning's paper, under "Personal Intelligence," he found a mention of the Winslows. "Mr. and Mrs. Peter Winslow are sailing on the Aquitania next Wednesday," the item read, "for an extended tour of the Continent." That was that, too. Barry's drama was ending with all its principal characters disposed of, as well-made drama should end.

Winslow's secretary called him just before noon. "Mr. Winslow wants me to tell you that Rogers will be free in an hour or two."

"How's Mrs. Winslow?"

"Much better. Mr. Winslow's still with her, though."

"And the Hamblidges?"

"No; they went back to Southampton last night."

Once more, that was that, Barry thought, getting his hat and making tracks for the subway. He reached the Tombs well in advance of official orders for the release of "Jay Rogers." It was nearly five o'clock, indeed, when "Jay Rogers" appeared, looking very white and haggard, and the last train had left for Southampton. "You can talk to Peggy on the phone," Barry told him, "and then you'd better have dinner with me, and a good night's rest at my hotel. The Bremen gets in very early, and you'll want to be on the dock."

Jack looked at him quizzically.

"Will I?"

"Won't you?"

"I suppose so. I'd like to see my mother."

"I'd like to see her myself," Barry said. "She's been swell to you, all right."

"Yes."

At dinner, Jack declared, "I'll take that job on the paper now, if my father'll give it to me."

"Why not?"

"You started me thinking. I can see the old man's viewpoint. He's got to be decent to Peggy, though. It's both of us, or neither. . . . What's going to happen to you?"

"Search me!"

"Look here," Jack blurted. "I'm Ridder now. Who needs to know that I was ever Jay Rogers? I've been at Southampton all the time, writing letters to my mother, and everything. You've been Barry Gilbert, working on the Globe, and likely to go on working there. What's the matter with that?"

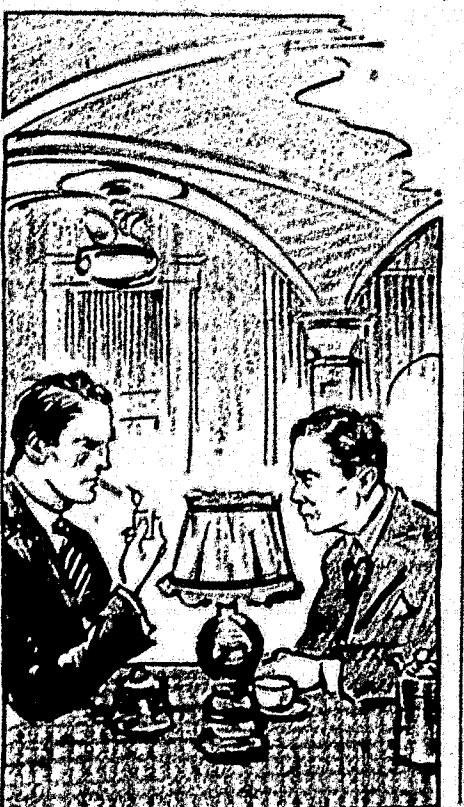

"Willets is the matter with it," Barry answered. "Willets, and Evans, and Winslow, and all the camera-clickers on the newspapers. There've been several pictures of you already. I can't understand why you weren't identified long ago."

"Maybe I was," Ridder admitted. "Your old college chums don't exactly run after you while you're in jail. They don't get to be college chums until you're in Who's Who."

"Anyway," he continued, "your scheme's out, I want to come clean. Don't ask me why. I was going to run away a week ago, and I could not make it. 'Gentlemen don't do that,' I said. I've got a new picture of myself as a gentleman."

"That's what does the trick, I guess," Jack speculated. "Most of us spend our lives trying to live up to the portraits of ourselves that hang over our mantel-pieces. Yours was of a reckless, devil-may-care young vagabond. Then you moved into a house, and company, where that picture didn't fit. You hung up a new one, and you've got to live up to that now. It was the same way with me. The picture of myself I liked was of an irresponsible, slightly dissipated young genius. The family portraits didn't appeal to me. Yours did—your new picture of yourself, I mean. I'm going to try to be like that the rest of my life."

"Maybe I Was," Ridder Admitted.

They were lingering over cigars and coffee now.

"What is a gentleman?" Barry asked.

Jack smiled.

"The fellow who gets the right portrait."

"I suppose so," Barry said. "Family and clothes didn't make you one—not when you were getting drunk and forging checks. I wasn't one when I took another man's name, and money, and made up to a girl who thought I was somebody else. . . . Pictures over mantel-piece. That's another word for tradition, I guess. The tradition that makes men defend women, and go down on sinking ships, and all that sort of thing. When that stops being our picture of ourselves, God help all of us, I told Pat once. . . . Come on; let's go to a movie!"

THE SPREE OF THE ALPHABET

Edward R. Newmann

The alphabet went on a spree one day. And the drunkest of all was the letter A. He passed the bottle down the line. But some of the letters said, "I decline."

A swig was taken by B. and C. And the flask was empty at X. Y. Z. The stuff was made of the New Deal maize, And produced a curious kind of haze.

It blurred their eyes with a strange disease, And they saw each other as twos and threes, They formed a parade in a maudlin way And the march was headed by N. R. A.

Then followed sedate old letter B, Jostled and crowded by C. C. C. A summons was sent throughout the land For letters and symbols to join their band.

The North and South replied with zest. They came from the East, they came from the West; They joined the ranks in strange array And they made a commander of A. A. A.

Then followed the dignified R. F. C. Then T. V. A. and S. E. C. Then drunkenly staggered F. H. A. Who leaned on the stalwart P. W. A.

They seized the staid old R. F. D. And spun him around 'til he couldn't see, When some one yelled "D'ye know where y'are?" He found himself turned into F. D. R.

The cost of music, song, and rum, Was mounting up to an awful sum; But those in charge knew what to do.

They paid with the letters I. O. U. The food they served in some strange way.

Seemed not to agree with U. S. A. It caused such terrible great distress They summoned assistance through S. O. S.

In prompt response to the urgent call, Came eminent doctors, nine in all, Who, after earnest consultation, Resolved against an operation.

The patient by much substitution, Had undermined his constitution. They laid the blame with smiles ironic Upon the so-called New Deal tonic.

They called the stuff a rank dis- grace, And ordered each letter to keep its place.

They dumped the liquor into the sea, Which marked the end of the al- phabet spree.
